Industry Overview

Industry sources report that there is a strong demand for general practitioners [GPs] throughout British Columbia due to a growing and aging population. Smaller, northern, rural communities are in particular need of GPs.

In response to this shortage, the Government of British Columbia has increased opportunities for medical education by establishing two medical programs at the University of Victoria and at the University of Northern British Columbia. Even so, there are still not enough graduates to replace the family physicians who retire every year. As a result, B.C. is increasingly dependent on importing physicians from other Canadian and international jurisdictions.

If you move to rural communities to practise you may receive incentives such as signing bonuses, student loan reductions, fee-for-service and flat sum premiums, or travel subsidies.

Types of Employers

General practitioners and family physicians usually work in private practice, including group or team practices, hospitals, and clinics.

Senior physicians may also work as hospital administrators, teach and / or conduct research at educational institutions, or work for government health authorities and other health related organizations.

Salary

The median annual salary for physicians in BC is $102,116.

Most general practitioners are self-employed, which means you run your own clinic or office. You are paid directly by the government, and the amount you make depends on how many patients you see and the medical procedures you perform. If you are self-employed you spend some of your income on office expenses, supplies, insurance premiums and staff, therefore; your net income is less than the amount received from the government.

If work for hospitals and other medical organizations you will likely receive benefits in addition to your salary. Benefits may include health and life insurance, pension plans, and paid vacation and sick days. If you are self-employed you must supply your own benefits.

Qualifications

Physician is a regulated profession in British Columbia

In British Columbia, registration with the College of Physicians & Surgeons of British Columbia (CPSBC) is mandatory.

- Licensing & registration can be found at CPSBC:
<https://www.cpsbc.ca/for-physicians/registration-licensing>

Family physicians must also pass a national exam administered by the College of Family Physicians of Canada.

- <https://www.cfpc.ca/Education/>

International Medical Graduates (IMG)

The College of Physicians and Surgeons of British Columbia welcomes applications from physicians who have obtained their medical degree from a medical school listed in the World Directory of Medical Schools which include the Canadian sponsor note (<https://www.wdoms.org/>)

International medical graduates (IMGs) are often registered in the provisional class as an interim step so that you can apply your knowledge and skill while under supervision. To advance to the full register, a registrant in the provisional class must complete Canadian qualifying exams or be eligible to participate in a comprehensive workplace assessment within a specified period of time.

IMGs who are not eligible for full or provisional registration, but who wish to enter a postgraduate training program in British Columbia, may apply to be registered as a clinical trainee, which can improve the likelihood of acceptance into a Canadian residency program. This licence allows you to obtain educational experience in Canada by permitting you to observe and learn in a practice setting under another physician's direct supervision, to a maximum of three years in total. Registrants in this class are not eligible for independent practice.

IMG family physicians who are initially screened by Health Match BC may qualify for selection in the Practice Ready Assessment – British Columbia (PRA-BC) program. Contact Health Match BC to discuss whether you are eligible to apply for entry into the PRA-BC program.
