2. Am I Suited For This Job?

Medical administrative assistants should have:

- excellent interpersonal skills
- strong communication skills
- tact and discretion and strong sense of ethics
- good judgment
- ability to work well under pressure

You should be:

- Detail-oriented
- Organized

Medical receptionists should have:

- strong communication skills
- good listening skills

You should be:

- polite, friendly, and courteous
- able to remain calm under pressure
- organized

Medical administrative assistants work in the offices of health care professionals (e.g., physicians and other medical practitioners, rehabilitation clinics, etc.). Hours are usually set by the employer's clinic hours, which may include evenings or weekends. If you work as a ward secretary in a hospital, you may sometimes be required to work on a shift system.

Medical administrative assistants may be at risk of contracting illnesses because you are in relatively close contact with patients, so precautions are taken to minimize the risk.

Medical receptionists usually work in office settings. Hours are generally Monday to Friday. You spend much of your time sitting at a computer which can put stress on your neck, back, shoulders and eyes. You are expected to manage many tasks at the same time, and often work in busy offices.

4. What Is The Job Outlook In BC?

Medical administrative assistants:

The majority of new job openings will result from retirements. Individuals who have completed related post-secondary studies, have good knowledge of computers and software applications, and have previous experience working in the occupation will be in high demand. The increasing use of electronic medical records (EMR), which is replacing paper-based record systems in many offices, requires that medical secretaries stay current with technological developments.

Most employers now require the completion of a Medical Office Assistant, or related certificate or diploma program. Inexperienced workers who have not completed post-secondary studies related to this occupation will likely have more difficulty finding work.
